Call for Credit Research Proposals

We are pleased to invite applications for grants to support the research and development of credit rating methodologies. The intent of these grants is to develop, refine and study credit rating methodologies for exchange listed firms, in order to bring in new ideas and spur research in this vital area of the financial world. Applications are open to researchers from around the world. All grants awarded will include access to RMI's database of nearly 60,000 listed firms in all major exchanges world-wide. The data on the firms include comprehensive financial statement data, equity data and any credit events that occur. The database can be accessed and used at NUS, and grants may include financial support for travel to Singapore for a short or long visit. Researchers retain the right to use and publish the methods they develop as they see fit. RMI retains the right to use the methods in full or in part in our rating activities. This may include the use of the methodology in the daily update of results on our web portal and/or publication of findings and results in the Global Credit Review. Any usage will be attributed to the contributing researchers.
